Playing the Fool is an historical novel set in seventeenth-century France and Italy. All the major characters in the novel are real-life figures living in this exciting and transitional period. Among the players are Cyrano de Bergerac, DArtagnan, Cardinal Richelieu, Louis XIII, Lully, Mazarin and, of course, Louis XIV, the Sun King. The principal player and the narrator of the story grew to manhood during the free-wheeling and swashbuckling years of Henri IV and the Regency of Marie de Medici. He survived the tyranny of the wily Richelieu and eventually found himself struggling to survive in the reactionary reign of the Sun King. This narrator is Charles Coypeau, scion of a Parisian lawyer and a bella donna from Italy with a golden voice and a shart tongue. Charles was very much a child prodigy with a gift for music and a gift for languages. He rebelled against the wishes of his father who sought to force the young boy to prepare for the legal profession. After his mismatched parents separated, the quick-witted prodigy managed to escape temporarily from...
