Electric Traction in Australia. --One of the requisites for the economical working of a large electric tramway is some method of utilising the plant during working hours as uniformly as possible up to its full capacity. One way in which this ideal may be to some extent realised is to dispose of the surplus power to other users during the times when it is not all required for the tramways. The Railway Commissioners of New South Wales will have a large amount of surplus electric power to dispose of from the Ultimo power-house, and for a long time past negotiations have been proceeding off and on for the Sydney City Council to take part of the surplus power for electric lighting purposes. So far, however, no definite arrangement has been reached. The suggestion has been made that the new Queen Victoria Markets might be conveniently lighted from the tramway power-house, but nothing has yet been done in this direction. In any case, the machinery at the power-house will not be ready for...
